Meet Mrs. Dolphin

First grade teacher loves watching students learn

By Becky Hammar

Andi Dolphin's journey as a first grade teacher in Pleasant Hill began as a child from Des Moines. Dolphin's grandmother taught her the joy of learning.

At 14, Dolphin became a life-guard. "I realized I liked watching kids learn something new," says Dolphin.

Swimming was her passion; Dolphin was always a competitive swimmer but wasn't the only fish in the sea.

"At one time, my cousin and I held all the swimming records in high school," she state proudly. Her entire family (about 30) went to East High — cousins, uncles and aunts.

At UNI, she swam on a co-ed team and was captain during her fourth year; she lettered all four years. As she laughs, "My college friends thought I married my husband because his name is 'Dolphin.'"

After college, Dolphin began her career at Smouse Opportunity School.

"I never thought I would ever leave Smouse," she says. "When Pleasant Hill Elementary had a first grade position, I decided to make a job transfer."

Apily named Andi Dolphin has a passion for swimming in her free time.

Dolphin smiles all day; she loves to read the students' stories.

"The things they write are so honest," she says. "One boy talked about fishing with his family but didn't catch any fish — but caught a 'big' frog."

"I love when they have learned something new, and you realize you have made a difference," says Dolphin.

Besides the pool and school, Dolphin has a huge family support system and cannot say enough to show her appreciation to all of them.

"A few years ago, there were 32 of us who went to Disney World," she says. "We all wore the same colored shirt."

Dolphin and her husband, Troy, have three children: Keagan, 9, Kade, 6, and McKenna, 4. She loves to be with her kids, and, of course, go to the pool in the summer. PHL

What do you like best about Mrs. Dolphin?

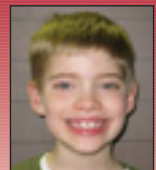

Kamryn Aswegan:
"When she teaches math."

Reese Lafrenz:
"Everything, I guess."

Dalton Stuart:
"Reading... because you learn a lot of words."

Kane Cutwright:
"She smiles like this (me)!"
